

1. This document identifies the work chosen to be done within the next sprint.
2. Items added to the Product Backlog are often large. They must be broken down into smaller pieces to allow the development team to be able to complete within the time allowed. What are very large items often called?
3. What is the recommended format of a user story?
4. This ritual is used to collect knowledge that will be used to improve the teams performance moving into the next sprint.
5. This document identifies the level of quality or completeness that a team strives for in their deliverable minimum viable product.
6. The amount of work that the team has averaged accomplishing (last 5-10 sprints) is called.
7. Who is in charge of deciding the sprint duration?
8. This ritual is used to present to the customer MVP's or findings and results.
9. This group of people are accountable for the amount, quality, and completeness of the MVP.
10. This is the role most associated with writing user stories.
11. How often should the "definition of done" be re-evaluated?
12. This role is responsible for identifying and removing obstacles faced by the developers.
13. This role monitors overall progress of the project (not individual scrum) and identifies the customer defined importance of individual items.
14. The scrum team is self contained (cross-functional)....In order to achieve this state, the team must consist of multiple skill sets. This desired set of skills is called a ?
15. This artifact is used by the team to show progress in the sprint.
16. This daily meeting is a maximum of 15 minutes in length and each team member answers 3 questions. Identify the 3 questions.
17. This task identifies PBI's that need to be further broken down, and also PBI's that have become unimportant and need to be removed.
18. Identify the 3 roles within sprint.
19. This is the two programmers working on the same code (usually with one screen). The senior programmer may be teaching the jr programmer coding "tricks".
20. This is the output of a sprint and is demonstrated for the customer during the sprint review.

21. The agile manifesto has 4 value statements.

We value Individuals and Actions over _____ and _____.

_____ over comprehensive documentation.

Customer collaboration over _____.

_____ over following a plan.